WHIP is good for everyone: businesses, workers, and the U.S. economy. Here’s why:
WHIP promotes workplace wellness by eliminating taxes employees currently pay on employer provided off-site fitness center benefits. Employees who exercise are happier, healthier, and more productive.

Every $1.00 spent on encouraging physical activity returns $3.20 in savings on medical costs.

Physically active employees take 27% fewer sick days and 14-25% fewer disability days.

Regular exercise boosts job performance by at least 15%.

Workers who exercise 1x/week or more have lower healthcare costs.

ROI among companies that provide employee wellness benefits range from $1.50 to $13 for every dollar invested.

Exercise helps prevent many chronic diseases, which cost America $794 billion each year in lost employee productivity.

82% of Americans say they’d engage in regular physical activity if their employer subsidized a health club membership.

WHIP would remove the tax employees pay on their employer subsidized fitness benefit.

Ensuring that physical activity is affordable and accessible for all Americans.

Giving Congress the opportunity to promote workplace wellness.
